SAUDI ARABIA AND IRAN MUST work together

The Middle East is facing a total collapse. An ideology of terror is spreading and in this way a new regional power is taking shape in the region. Iran, a leading Shia power, which has developed within only decades; and the conflict between al Arab governments do not offer any solution to defuse the conflict in Palestine. In the Middle East – specifically Iran, the six countries of the [Persian] Gulf, on the other hand, a regional cooperation, which re-establishes the dialogue between the two neighboring and friendly countries through political dialogue.

Rouhani urged the Arab and Azerbaijani presidents to use all their efforts to make sure that the ceasefire is fully “monitored.”

Resumption of clashes will not be in the interest of all regional countries, especially the Republic of Azerbaijan and Armenia, the Iranian president remarked.

The region is already facing great crises and terrorists and their supporters are always looking to spread the fires to the entire region. In such condition further tension and clash can prepare the situation for their intentions, the president added.

Exchange of fire between Azerbaijan and Armenia broke out on April 2. Dozens of servicemen from both sides have been killed and some more injured.

While each of the two countries have been pressing the finger at each other accusing each of war-mongering, the international community have invited the two sides to exercise restraint.

Cypriot: opportunities after Iran deal

The changes to sanctions on Iran and what they mean for the business world were analyzed during a dinner organized in Nicosia by the Cyprus Chamber of Commerce and Industry and the American Chamber of Commerce in Cyprus, in the presence of Minister of Commerce, Industry, Tourism and Energy, Yiorgos Lakkotrypis and the U.S. Ambassador in Nicosia, Kathleen Doherty. In his speech, Lakkotrypis said that the Cyprus business community related to the changes in sanctions regime to sanctions on Iran by conducting fact-finding missions to identify areas for business cooperation within the Iranian market.

He noted that beyond opportunities in domestic exports of certain products, such as pharmaceutical products and pharmaceutical services, the professional services industry is expected to benefit from the primary sales.

In this context, he added, the government proceeded recently with the signing of a double taxation avoidance agreement regime between Cyprus and Iran and a number of ministerial visits that already took place by Ministers of Transport, Agriculture and himself.

He also said that opportunities in the tourism sector are also expected. Noting that Iran offers tremendous opportunities for businesses and that already a number of European countries have made agreements with Iran, he urged the Cypriot business world to see how they can improve the trade relations with Iran.

In her speech, the U.S. ambassador spoke about the recent changes to Iran sanctions policy and what those changes must be for businesses in Cyprus. She said the Iran deal represents a huge diplomatic accomplishment and a significant achievement of non sanctions regime brought about by the Iran deal.

The U.S. ambassador reiterated the Secretary of State John Kerry's message that the US in no way intends to stand in the way of legitimate businesses dealings with Iran. She pointed out that there is no way of early days of significant change in sanctions and many companies involved in the very early exploratory phase of learning what sanctions relief means for them.

Beating diabetes by promoting healthy diets in Iran

The attacks today (7th of April) marks the World Health Day for 2016 and offers Iran an opportunity to raise global awareness on Diabetes, the theme focused for this year, and its impact on millions around the globe.

According to the World Health Organization (WHO), diabetes, its complications, and its economic burden in developing and low- and middle-income countries.

Today, we live in a world where human nutrition is changing rapidly, diseases caused by excessive or unbalanced diets. More than half the world’s diseases can be attributed to hunger, unbalanced energy intake or vitamin and mineral deficiencies – and developing nations are quickly joining the ranks of the countries dealing with severe health issues.

High energy intake, poor dietary habits and faulty metabolism lead to an entirely different set of problems. Obesity and chronic diseases, diabetes and hypertension are quickly becoming a social and economic burden on the middle-income countries. Recent evidence also indicates that several diseases may be linked to excessive energy intake and childhood obesity.

While rising health care costs, consequences vary both the underweight and the overweight and are diseases which are rising most rapidly: type 2 diabetes, obesity, increased special needs population, diminished life span and dimin-ished economic productivity. The need is developing nations, their resources already stretched to the limit, are now coping increasingly with serious health issues. Over the year, 92% of the nutritional spectum.

Yemen’s Ansarullah calls truce in war-stricken region

On Monday, Saudi Foreign Minister Adel al-Jubeir announced that an agreement of Ansarullah was in the Arab kingdom, marking a step toward ending the war.

An Ansarullah spokesman, Muhammad Abdulsalam, on Tuesday that a ceasefire with Saudi Arabia had halted operations in a number of Yemeni provinces.

He said the truce would pave the way for peace talks between Yemeni fighters and the former president Abd Rabbo Mansur Hadi.

Last month, the United Nations special envoy to Yemen, Ismail Ould Cheikh Ahmed, announced that the former government and the Ansarullah movement had agreed to halt hostilities on April 1 of new round of peace talks to be held in Kuwait on April 17.

The House of Saadi regime is un- der growing pressure to end its protracted war as a new situation has developed with the successful return of the former fugitive president Abd Rabbuh Mansur Hadi last Wednesday.

The new administration has in recent days been broad-ening its concerns beyond its immediate needs to explore various options for future changes.

The stability and integrity of Saudi Arabia is an ideological, political, and economic necessity to the kingdom—whether it is a question of its social development that can be linked to the kingdom and its people.
